History of disease of Madame Raevich.

Dec. 12. 1930

Anamnesis.

Scarlet fever in m.m.'s childhood. Apparently - no complications. She was physically always strong. Since her childhood she suffered of various nervous symptoms probably of hysterical nature, of a permanent irregularity of heart's function. Her all physicians always advised her to stay in the mountainous region. she had several abscesses on the roots of the teeth. before she suffered from articular gout. She was all her life very sensitive psychically. Some of the doctors have found some displacement of abdominal organs. She always was subject to constipation and very persistent meteorisms. The m. were more or less regular and finished abruptly and without much disturbance at the age of 42. There was diagnosed a uterofibrosis and she was treated for it. The present disease is practically a continuation of her condition described above, but ~~was~~ recently aggravated ^{since} 10 years ago and especially after her Tibetan trip and a long detention of her party during 6 months on the heights of Tibetan mountains, under most trying climatic conditions, which even caused death of 5 men. All these last 10 years ^{her disease} she is practically of the same nature, ~~if~~ ^{gradually} getting worse, but there is a sequence of periods of when the condition is severely aggravated ~~to be replaced~~ ^{followed} by some brighter periods. She never was able to stand low altitudes and heat. While she was in New York her heart and nervous troubles ^{were} very acute and several times she had ~~very~~ voluminous swellings of her elbows, which looked as a suspended bag, and of her feet. This swelling lasted usually for 3-4 days, and at pressure there always remained ^{edematous} depression of the skin. All her secretions: of saliva, of skin glands, etc. were scarce, and so was the amount of urine. From time to time there were traces of sugar and albumin in the urine. She had a sharp dermographic reaction, sharp knee jerk, hypersensitiveness of the skin and very often - abnormally enlarged pupils, which always reacted in a normal way.

Among the subjective signs the most prominent feature was a variety and instability of pains in the ^{head, in the} ~~in the~~ organs and in the trunk muscles. Sometimes ~~appeared~~ nausea accompanied by a large amount of saliva. She had recently intense pains in the region of the right kidney, descending toward into the st. region iliacae. At that period she suffered ~~from~~ a vomiting spell with traces of blood. All her nervous system was shaken, she had also convulsions. Her father was physically very strong but suffered ~~from~~ cardiac asthma and died ~~from~~ it. Her mother died ~~from~~ chronic fulminant appendicitis. The sister died at childhood from tuberculous meningitis.

Status praesens.

Age 52. General appearance below this age.

Skeletal-muscular system. The patient is of a middle size, normal built, no skeletal defects. The muscular system is normal. There is some tendency to stoutness.

Skin and sub-cutaneous layers.

Skin is rather dry but preserves its normal elasticity. Has its normal colour with some tendency to become pale during nervous crises, especially on the extremities. The sub-cutaneous fatty layer is well developed.

Lungs. Apparently normal.

Respiration - 16 a minute.

Heart. The sounds are clear with a slight accent on the second sound at the apex. The left limit of the heart is slightly on the left from the normal. All other limits are normal.

Pulse. Full, but sometimes during one minute only its intensity is changing, representing a sequence of strong and weak short periods. The pulsation is 84 p. minute in average, in certain occasions reaching over 120 p. minute.

24

Mostly it is arrhythmic with a tendency to acceleration. From time to time there could be observed syncopes, which always give an unpleasant, and distinct feeling in the region of the heart.

The blood pressure (auscultation at the a. humeralis) is: systolic - 16 cm. (normal for her age is: 12-14); diastolic - 12 cm. (normal - 8-9).

The heart in general is very excitable and there are very frequent the accesses of a cardiac anxiety.

Mouth. The tongue is normal. There is a continuous dryness of mucosa of the naso-pharynx, a decreased secretion of salivary glands. The canine teeth are ~~relatively~~ relatively big.

Stomach. The lower limit is slightly moved downward. The motion is rather slow. There are sometimes vomiting spells, which come apparently without any connection with food. The vomited masses ^{may} consist of half-digested food, traces of bile, mucus and sometimes of traces of blood. These vomitings are always very painful.

A pressure upon the stomach gives a slight, diffuse tenderness.

Bowel. A chronic constipation of a very persistent and well marked type. Meteorism, sometimes of a high degree. A slight, diffuse tenderness at pressure. Sometimes, a well manifested tenderness in the region of the appendix.

Liver is apparently normal

Spleen is apparently normal
Kidneys. Some ^{irradiating, spontaneous} descending pains in the region of the right kidney. There appeared several times traces of sugar and of albumin. The right kidney seems to be movable. The urine is very scanty, very dark, usually clear.

Adrenals is slightly atrophic. Other ~~organs~~ are apparently normal.
Nervous system. White dermographism. Hyperaesthesia of the skin. Sometimes a transitory numbness and paleness of fingers.

Muscular reflexes are increased. Pupils react normally, but there is a marked tendency to be dilated. There is an inhibitory influence upon the secretion of various skin glands, ^{and lacrimal} salivary glands, kidney, ~~intestines~~ ^{intestines} etc. an accelerating influence upon the heart. and a vasoconstrictive one in the peripheral vessels. There is apparently a hyperfunction of the sympathetic system.

The patient is very sensitive, has a good memory, her mental processes are ^{very} intense and ^{active} the judgement and perception are clear and sharp.

Subjective symptoms. There is a great variety of pains and diffuse feeling in regard of locality, intensity and time. ~~And~~ Steady tenderness is felt in the regions of the heart and of the abdomen, headaches and various feelings usually encountered in cases of a movable kidney. Very often there is a burning sensation over a lower part of the sternum, around ^{a precordial anxiety} the heart, in the region of the solar plexus etc. The patient never lies on her back, because of a difficulty of breathing and different heart symptoms which usually follow this position. The appetite is low,

The sleep is restless and superficial. ~~Any increase of~~ ^{heat} humidity of the atmosphere, wind, accumulation of the atmospheric electricity have immediate bad effect on the health. The same aggravation of symptoms but even in a more intense degree ~~is~~ followed every attempt of the patient to descend to lower altitudes, than 6,000 feet.

Organs of senses. Are normal, except the eyes, which suffer from a presbyopia.

Discussion. M-me Rarrick is in general a highly nervous and psychical type. Part of her pains and sensations can be explained by her enteroptosis, but the following symptoms speak for a well pronounced sympathetic-tonia, which is evidently the main feature of her disease: 1) a tendency to acceleration of the pulse, its arrhythmia and irregularity in force; 2) high blood pressure; 3) a persistent constipation with a tendency to strong meteorism; 4) a frequent vomiting without an ^{frequency} paleness of extremities immediate relation to the condition of the stomach and of mind by which does not correspond to an actual stomach trouble; 5) a frequent paleness of the extremities and an impairment of the circulation of the blood; 6) lessened secretion of various glands: salivary, ^{that of mucosa of larynx} sweat, ^{that of nose} lacrimal etc, lessened secretion of kidneys; 7) a tendency of the peripheral blood vessels to constriction, 8) white dermographism, 9) sensation of blood congestion in the internal organs and in the brain; 10) increase of the muscular reflexes; 11) hyperaesthesia of the skin; 12) a tendency of the pupils to enlarge ^{etc}, which altogether form

a characteristic symptoms-complex of hyperfunction of ^{the} adrenal gland and ^{the} nervous sympathetic systems; 13) well developed ^{the} fatty sub-cutaneous layer; 14) big canine teeth, 15) youthful face; 16) an intensified mental activity etc. All these symptoms are characteristic for a ~~sym~~ hyperfunction of the nervous sympathetic system, ~~due~~ of the adrenal (chromaffin) endocrine system. A high altitude above the sea level and coolness of the air produce a tonic effect upon the central and para-sympathetic nervous systems, thus counteracting the ^{hyperfunction} effect of the sympathetic system, which in unsuitable climatic conditions may become very dangerous for the life. Besides, there is ^{organism} ~~no~~ ^{after} 7 years of an uninterrupted stay on the alti-finds above 6,000 feet, adapted itself to the environment and it would be exceedingly risky to try to bring us - me Peckish into lower altitudes. We hardly can expect the improvement of the condition which, in the contrary, tends to be aggravated. In this case it is advisable to live on still higher altitudes especially during warm weather.
