

2

MEME HELENA ROERICH

How does one describe a star? That it shines with clear pure light and drips crystals of life's elixir upon a tired world? That it rides high and serene through the deep blue night holding out hope and promise to oft defeated man? All this and much, much more is a star.

How does one describe a flower? By its delicate texture and subtle hues? By the fragrance that through its sweet simplicity banishes the corrosive poisons of decay and brings fresh new life to tired nature. This is a flower, yes, but this and much, much more.

How then can one describe a Messenger of Light, a Bearer of Mercy, a Vessel of Grace, an Emissary of Hierarchy, a Herald of the Lord? For She is all of these and much, much more.

Joseph J. Weed