Ballots so prepared and signed, received by the Secretary of the Board of Overseers prior to the closing of the polls shall be counted for the election of Overseers of that year.

The Secretary of the Board may, on the request of an elector prior to the Friday preceding Commencement Day, furnish by mail or in person an official ballot to such elector to be voted by mail in place of a ballot which has been lost or not received by the elector or which has been spoiled or defaced.

In all other respects, except as herein expressly modified, elections of Overseers shall, until the adoption of other rules and regulations, be conducted in accordance with the statutory provisions and Rules and Regulations heretofore in force regulating such elections.

DUTIES OF A MEMBER OF THE BOARD OF OVERSEERS

The meetings of the Board of Overseers consist usually of eight stated and one or two special meetings distributed throughout the academic year from September to June.

Each member is expected to serve on Standing Committees or Visiting Committees to which appointments are made by the Board upon the nomination of the Executive Committee. In practice, the number of committees to which each member is assigned varies from one to four.

The ordinary business of the Board consists, first, of the receipt of formal communications from the President and Fellows, comprising (1) appointments to all teaching positions for a term longer than one year, and to the more important administrative offices and boards; (2) all degrees — both ordinary and honorary; (3) changes in the statutes of the University; (4) other important orders and regulations. All these matters are submitted by the President and Fellows to the Board of Overseers, "that they may consent thereto if they see fit."

In the second place, the Board receives from the President informal communications for the information of the Board, or for the purpose of obtaining their counsel.

In the third place, the Board discusses, on the initiative of its own members or committees, affairs relating to the University and its several Departments and questions are addressed to the President in regard to any matters on which information is desired from him.

The Visiting Committees, of which Overseers are usually chairmen, are the instrumentality through which the Overseers keep themselves informed of what work the University is doing and of the way in which that work is done. It is partly through these committees, which usually include in their membership a majority who are not members of the Board, that the University keeps in touch with the outer world; and it is also through them that the legitimate interest of the public in the conduct of the University can be most effectively expressed for purposes of criticism, suggestion, coöperation, and support. The work of the committees is done by individual visiting of classrooms, libraries, museums, laboratories, etc., by consultation with teachers and administrative officers, and by meetings of the committees. The chairman of each committee is expected to make occasional informal or oral reports to the Board and to make a report in writing at least once in three years.

Naturally, the exigencies of business and public office and remoteness of residence are factors limiting the time which Overseers can give to their duties if elected and are to be taken into account in determining a candidate's availability for this service. The advantages to the University, however, of having a representation on the Board from the more remote parts of the country have been held to compensate for the disadvantages of infrequent or uncertain attendance. On the other hand, it is important that a substantial proportion of the membership of the Board should be counted on for regular attendance at Board and committee meetings.

No member of the Corporation and no officer of instruction or government in the University, except a Professor Emeritus, is eligible as an Overseer or entitled to vote in the election of Overseers.

THE HARVARD ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

The Harvard Alumni Association, with its office at Wadsworth House in Cambridge, is the official association of all graduates holding degrees granted by the University. It is controlled by a Board of Directors, a majority of whom are elected by the alumni on this postal ballot; in addition to those so elected there are representatives of the Faculty and various Harvard graduate organizations.

The purpose of the Association is to provide an organization through which the graduates may further the interests of the University and to be of service to Harvard men. Its work has constantly increased and broadened and, as new opportunities to promote the welfare of the University have been discovered, the Directors of the Alumni Association have created new agencies to carry on the work.

The Association is the official agency seeking to harmonize and make increasingly effective the enthusiasm and efforts of Harvard men, Harvard Clubs, and the Associated Clubs, to advance the welfare of the University.
