

On April 14, 1935, in the office of President Roosevelt, at the White House in Washington, the official representatives of the United States of America and all the twenty Latin-American countries signed the Treaty of the Pact. After the signing of the Pact, President Roosevelt delivered the following message in an international broadcast : "It is most appropriate that on this day, designated as Pan-American Day by the chief executives of all the republics of the American continent, the governments - members of the Pan-American Union - should sign a treaty which marks a step forward in the preservation of the cultural achievements of the nations of this hemisphere. In opening this Pact to the adherence of the nations of the world, we are endeavoring to make of universal application one of the principles vital to the preservation of modern civilization. This treaty possesses a spiritual significance far deeper than the text of the instrument itself. Let us bring renewed allegiance to those high principles of international cooperation and helpfulness, which, I feel assured, will be a great contribution to civilization by the Americas."
