In the case of children, the parents are obliged to provide for their maintenance and education. The law states that parents must support their children until they are able to support themselves.
 This obligation is not limited to the child's infancy but extends to their childhood and even into adulthood if they are unable to support themselves due to physical or mental disability.
 The law also provides that parents must provide for their children's education, including the cost of tuition, books, and other expenses.
 If a parent fails to fulfill these obligations, the child may be placed in the care of the state or a relative. The law also provides that parents who neglect their children may be subject to criminal penalties.
