To Louis Bean

I believe I promised to write you, but I've been so overwhelmed with things---swamped below all visibility--- that I haven't been able to accomplish the least note before now, and this one will have to be a model of brevity.

The truth is, too, that I have no more knowledge than I gave you. Neither, so far as I can see, could I obtain it unless I were in Washington. What continues to stand out in my mind is the Karmic future which is bound to descend very heavily on our mutual friend sooner or later. I should really like to know what you think about the situation, and if anything can be done to help.

I hope you will understand my motive. I spoke to you on my own initiative purely out of a desire to render aid to H. W. in a situation which I think emphatically calls for any aid which can be given.

Kindest greetings always,

Faithfully,

J. Wild
